Founded in 1880, The Santa Fe Railyard was a major transportation hub of Santa Fe until the 1940s, when the post WWII highway building boom put it out of business. The site languished for many years while other Santa Fe locations flourished.

The Railyard revival is now in full swing. Much has been accomplished and much more is to come. It features galleries, retail stores, restaurants, performance spaces, as well as a new building for the Santa Fe Farmers' Market. It is home to the new Railyard Park, which features more than 13 acres of open space, including a park, a plaza and a pedestrian promenade. Future plans include additional gallery space, a cinema and live-in artist studios.

The centerpiece of the Railyard is New Mexico Rail Runner Express. This fast and convenient train now makes travel from Albuquerque to Santa Fe even easier.
